Do No Harm: Social Sin and Christian Responsibility

Two studies supporting the view that 5-diol is estrogenic include one in which breast cancer patients who progressed during treatment with an aromatase inhibitor showed improvement when treated with a sulfatase inhibitor In the other study, it was shown that the conversion of DHEA into 5-diol is increased in endometria from women with polycystic ovarian syndrome compared with normal cycling women This finding, coupled with the high estrogen sensitivity found in endometria from women with polycystic ovarian syndrome, suggests that 5-diol may account for the increase in endometrial cell proliferation observed in these women.
